4. Abstract

Multiprofessional cooperation becomes increasingly important in the healthcare sector. Effective coordination and collaboration amongst practitioners is vital to the delivery of good care to patients with a complex pattern of symptoms. In the future more patients will suffer from chronic, and in many cases complex, illnesses. So, cooperation between professionals is going to become more and more necessary.

This course creates a learning situation in which multiprofessional cooperation can be practised by students from different faculties and subjects, working together on the same cases – especially, the treatment of patients after stroke (cerebral vascular accident, CVA).

The aim of the course is to familiarise students with the preparation and conduct of multiprofessional or multidisciplinary interaction with a view to producing a treatment or care plan.

Students will learn not just to look beyond the boundaries of their own profession, but even across national borders, as the course takes the form of a summerschool and is open to international participants.

6. Motivation letter: Please, justify why this is a good example of good practice

In this international summerschool students learn from each other, and from (Dutch) experts out of the field of rehabilitation. Since there are students from different countries and different professions, they deepen and widen their knowledge about stroke, rehabilitation and collaboration. They learn about health care systems in different countries, and about different cultures.

Evidence based practice is a major topic in the course, so results from scientific research is integrated in the care for stroke patients.
